Mr. Hathaway escaped through the Federal lines and came to Bowling Green, bringing several men with him, who joined the Southern army. Mr. Hathaway, with Colonel Jo Morchead, had authority to raise and organize a regiment, and proceeded to enlist a number of men. The Southern army fell back out of Kentucky in February, 1862, and 1 saw hut little of Mr. Hathaway until about May, 1862. In June, 1862, Mr. Hathaway came to see me and informed me that Colonel Morehead had been cantinged and that the regiment had been captured and that the regiment was about to fall through. I thought Mr. Hathaway too old to go into the army as a private and I knew that he could not live in the South without means, and I adive in the could writer home and de he best he could Mr. Hathaway ex

In P23 the cele frated Chaucellor Biblo, of Kentucky, whose piscatorial propensities are passed probably any other disciple of Old Isane Walton, and who had enjoyed that delightful annusement oftener, and with were intense interest than any other man, visited the little town of Falmouth, Kentucky, to spend a few months in the sibut enjoyment of his favorite annusement. Dining with his friend B, as was his Dining with his frient B, as was his usual wont, an appointment was made to meet at four o clock, just behw the evanuent streams of the Main Licking with its seath fork in sight of the little city. His friend found him with his pantaloons pulled up to his knees, out on the point of a bar, sitent as a sucker, enjoying the expectation of a "glorieus nibide." Taking a position jet below, he very cautiously and silently (for the Judge would not suffer a stone to be moved a threw out his line, and remained some half an hour in statu que. B., observing a large 'red horse

B, observing a large red horse wriggling through the water not far from the shore—one that had been crippled in getting through the mill-race on the south tork, about one hundred yards above—and concluding to give His Honor a surprise, laid down his fishing pole, and deliberately rolling uphis own pants and sleeves, which the former observing, inquired of B "What are you going to do? The latter snawered that he had become tired and impatient, and was determined to go in and see if he could not catch a fish. The Judge thinking it a foolish jest, barely replied "bumph."

His friend B, however, advanced knee deep into the water. The fish, which up to that time had been almost stationary, made another wriggle forward, and stopped to that time had been almost stationary, made another wriggle forward, and stopped nearly at his feet. Reaching down he caught it, and turning round threw it out upon the sand-bank, where it flounced about in an element entirely new.

The Judge haid down his rod, straight-ned himself up in perfect astonishment, and turning to his friend, said, with great composure and strong emphasis, "I'll be damned if I ever heard of such fishing as that before." damned if I ever heard of such ashing as that before."

His friend never explained to him the trick, and probably the Judge has not often told the story, fearing it would be called a fish story.—Cincinnati Enquirer.
